School District Rating System

The state accountability system is required to rate all districts and campuses that serve students in grades 1 through 12. Most districts and campuses identified for standard procedures receive one of the four primary rating labels (Exemplary, Recognized, Academically Acceptable, or Academically Unacceptable)

Q: All the campuses in our district are Exemplary or Recognized, but the district is rated Acceptable. How can that be?

It is often the case that individual schools have higher ratings than their district. Any one of a number of situations may explain it:

First of all, there are fewer students at the school level. That is, while schools and districts are held accountable for the performance of all students, the individual student groups (African American, Hispanic, White, and Economically Disadvantaged) must have at least 30 students to be considered in the ratings system. For that reason, an elementary school might be judged on only 7 or 8 indicators because it had very few students taking (for example) 5th grade TAKS science. On the other hand, at the district level, where science is tested in grades 5, 8, 10, & 11, there may be enough students in each group, so the district is held accountable for the performance of every student group in science.

Second, students who move from campus to campus within the same district during the school year may have their results removed from each campus's performance. However, their results are included in the district's performance. This is referred to as the Accountability Subset.

Third, elementary and middle schools are not accountable for the Completion Rate indicator. As a result, districts are more likely to be held accountable for all 35 indicators, while many schools are held accountable for fewer than 10 indicators.

Finally, a district's rating is held to Academically Acceptable if any of its campuses is rated Academically Unacceptable or if certain problems are found with the quality of the district's data leaver reporting.

How can I find out which school district and campus my child will attend?

The Tx Education Agency (TEA) collects and reports information regarding school district boundaries. School districts assign children to schools on the basis of defined attendance zones or other assignment or transfer policies. Once you establish the school district in which your child resides, you can contact that district for information regarding the school your child will attend.
